

TRIBAL LEGAL STUDIES

TEXTBOOK SERIES

Tribal Law & Policy Institute, 8235 Santa Monica Blvd, Suite 211, West Hollywood, CA 90046 • (323) 650-5467

This new series is a collaborative initiative between the Tribal Law & Policy Institute (see Tribal Court Clearinghouse, www.tribal-institute.org), Turtle Mountain Community College, and UCLA Native Nations Law and Policy Center. It is designed to promote education and community empowerment by developing new resources for and about tribal justice systems. These publications were made possible in part by a grant from the U.S. Department of Justice, Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA). For more information, see www.triballelegalstudies.org.

American Indian tribal court systems deal with a wide range of difficult criminal and civil justice problems on a daily basis. Culturally-based legal training is one of Indian country's most pressing needs, as tribes assume responsibility for a growing number of government functions, such as child welfare and environmental control, and tribal courts continue to expand as the primary sources of law enforcement and dispute resolution for tribal communities. This series is designed to develop legal and technical resources for tribal justice course offerings and materials, so that they reflect community thought, philosophy, traditions, and norms, and serve to strengthen tribal government and leadership.
